THE SNAPSHOT IS INTENDED FOR USE AS A SURVEY OF THE CURRENT STATE OF THE LAW, NOT AS AN ANALYSIS OR COMMENTARY.

This survey provides the basic information needed to launch a dialogue on the inclusion of children in federal and state sex offender registration and notification systems. At this time, the authors have no plans to supply continuing updates on changes in the laws.

The Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act was passed in 2006.¹ Although the Act contains numerous provisions aimed at combating incidents of sexual assault in the United States, the section of the Act that has garnered the most attention is Title I, the Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act (hereinafter referred to as “SORNA”). SORNA directs the fifty states, the District of Columbia, certain federally recognized Native American Tribes, and the primary U.S. Territories to include children in their sex offender registration and notification systems.² Jurisdictions that fail to enact the SORNA Guidelines by the final deadline, July 27, 2011, risk losing ten percent of their Edward Byrne Memorial Justice Assistance federal funding for noncompliance.³ The Act represents a substantial shift away from previous legislation, which allowed states to decide for themselves how to treat this unique subset of young individuals.⁴

Attempting to meet the demands of SORNA implementation by the final deadline, many state legislatures have rushed to pass some version of the SORNA Guidelines into law.⁵ Unfortunately, the SORNA Guidelines leave much room for misinterpretation. Despite Congress’ goal of standardizing sex offender registration systems, communities are left with a disarray of laws that may do more harm than good to public safety.

As the research for this publication was collected, it became apparent that any effort to analyze these laws from a particular perspective would be a daunting, and perhaps futile, task. In light of the mottled condition of sex offender registration and notification laws across the country, and the fact that this book was started less than a year before the final deadline for states to come into compliance with SORNA, our goal is to provide a straightforward reference guide during this time of great flux.

ORGANIZATION OF THE SNAPSHOT

The Snapshot is intended to be a reference book. It is organized into seven sections.

SECTION I starts with an introduction to the Snapshot and the Sex Offender Registration Act (SORNA). We then segue to the “Origins and History” of sex offender registration and notification laws in the United States. The history shows how the laws created to track adult, convicted sex offenders were hastily expanded to include children.

SECTION II, “The Adam Walsh Act: Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act (SORNA),” provides the reader with insight into the challenges of SORNA implementation and looks at the problems of a federal law that includes youth in adult registration and notification systems.

SECTION III, “A Guide to SORNA,” is divided into three parts. Part A of the SORNA Guide is a glossary of terminology, defined as used throughout the book and in the SORNA Final Guidelines. Part B of the Snapshot contains an annotated interpretation of “Offenses Requiring Registration” as defined by the SORNA guidelines. Three sample states – Arkansas, Kansas, and Maryland – were used to illustrate what falls under the broad category of “Offenses Requiring Registration” under the SORNA Guidelines. Part C is a brief and practical chart detailing the main components of juvenile sex offender registration and notification in the seven states deemed to be in compliance by the U.S. Department of Justice as of June 6, 2011, the date this text was revised.

SECTION IV offers a listing of the “Individual State Registration and Notification Requirements Applied to Children,” organized by category.

SECTION V presents a comprehensive chart highlighting, comparing, and contrasting the main provisions of registration and notification laws applied to children and adolescents adjudicated delinquent in the United States. The chart is organized in alphabetical order by jurisdiction.

SECTION VI expands on the information contained in the table in Section V with separate fact sheets summarizing the laws applied to children in each of the 50 states, Guam, and the District of Columbia.

Finally, SECTION VII gives the reader a “Directory of the State Sex Offender Registration Administrators.” Officially called “SORs,” these administrators are the officials assigned by the U.S. Department of Justice to oversee the sex offender registration and notification systems in each jurisdiction.

Note: Title I, § 146 of the Adam Walsh Act created a new office entitled the “Sentencing, Monitoring, Apprehension, Registration and Tracking” (SMART) Office.⁶ The SMART Office, located in the Department of Justice’s Office of Justice Programs, is responsible for all matters related to the implementation and administration of SORNA. Since the SMART Office opened in 2007, only 13 of the 248 jurisdictions have “substantially implemented” SORNA.⁷ The SMART Office is tasked with bringing the remaining 235 jurisdictions in compliance with SORNA by the July 27, 2011 final deadline. This book reflects juvenile sex offender registration and notification legislation and information current through May 1, 2011. Readers are cautioned that the sex offender registration laws of jurisdictions are likely to change as the text goes to press. Text updated on July 14, 2011.

INTRODUCTION

The Introduction offers the reader a glimpse into the Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act (SORNA), the 2006 federal law that prompted the authors' decision to create the Snapshot. This section also begins to frame the issues arising from the expansion of sex offender registration and notification laws to children. Lastly, the Introduction segues to the History and Origins of sex offender registration and notification laws, providing the reader with a look at the evolution of such laws from 1989 to the present.

Passed by the United States Congress in 2006, the Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act (SORNA) provides a set of federal guidelines that will require jurisdictions to drastically change their sex offender registration and notification systems. Among these significant changes, SORNA requires juveniles adjudicated delinquent of certain serious sexual offenses to be treated in the same manner as adult sex offenders. Children must register with local law enforcement and their personal identifying information can be released to the public.

Jurisdictions that do not comply with SORNA risk losing a percentage of their federal anti-crime funding. However, fiscal studies indicate that jurisdictions will have to pay far more to implement SORNA than they will receive in federal funding.¹ In fact, some states are hesitant to implement SORNA for this very reason.

SORNA represents the first time in the nearly twenty-year history of sex offender registries that a law has placed such an enormous fiscal burden on state budgets and specifically included children on a national, public registry. Among other measures, SORNA:

SUBJECTS children to full registration and notification. The SORNA Guidelines mandate that youth register, if prosecuted and convicted as adults or if adjudicated delinquent as juveniles, for a sex offense comparable to or more serious than “aggravated sexual abuse.”

ESTABLISHES a new federal and state criminal offense for “Failure to Register” that is punishable by a term of imprisonment.

BROADENS the range of registerable sexual offenses.

IMPOSES an offense-based registration; eliminates judicial discretion and risk assessment of individuals required to register.

CREATES three tiers of registration with Tier III requiring lifetime registration and notification. This new system also makes changes in the required minimum duration of registration and establishes a Tier system based on offense of conviction or adjudication.²

Tier 1: Includes people convicted of whatever offenses do not support a higher classification, such as misdemeanor registration offenses and possession of child pornography. People on Tier 1 must register for a minimum of fifteen years and must update their registration annually.³

Tier 2: Includes people convicted of most felonious sexual abuse or sexual exploitation offenses involving victims who are minors. People on Tier 2 must register for a minimum of twenty-five years and must update their registration every six months.

Tier 3: Includes individuals convicted of sexual assaults involving sexual acts regardless of victim age, sexual contact offenses against children below the age of thirteen, nonparental kidnapping of minors, and attempts or conspiracies to commit such offenses. Nearly all individuals that come onto the registry for a juvenile offense will fall into Tier 3. Individuals in Tier 3 must register for life and must update their registration every three months.

APPLIES retroactively. Individuals adjudicated delinquent or convicted of a sex offense prior to SORNA’s passage are subject to SORNA’s registration requirements if (a) they are currently registering, (b) under supervision or incarcerated, or (c) if the offender re-enters the system because of a new felony conviction whether or not the new crime is a sex offense.

EXPANDS the requirements of registration & community notification:

- Requires individuals to register and keep their registration current in the jurisdictions where they reside, work, and attend school.
- Requires individuals to provide more extensive registration information, including photos.
- Requires individuals to make periodic in-person appearances to verify and update their registration information.
- Greatly expands the amount of information available to the public regarding people on the registry.

DESIGNS a national online registry – a web site searchable by anyone, anywhere.

Few types of crimes have commanded the same public attention and evoked the same level of outrage as sexual offenses. This public animosity for individuals accused of sexual offenses is reflected in the unique handling of sex offenses by both federal and state legislative bodies. The most obvious example of dissimilar legislative treatment is the rapid proliferation of federal registration, community notification, and residency restriction laws imposed on sex offenders when they are released back into local communities.

Policies aimed at preventing sexual violence have been driven by sensationalized media accounts of crimes that have a sexual component, as well as the general public’s visceral emotional reaction to reported crimes. As a result, millions of dollars of state and federal resources support registries, despite the fact that research does not show if these systems actually affect the number or type of sex crimes committed. What we do know, however, is that these registries consume public resources, divert law enforcement attention, and may, in fact, be funded at the expense of alternative approaches that research suggests would actually reduce sexual violence in our communities. SORNA requires states to register more people and keep track of them for even longer periods of time, without the availability of sufficient federal funding.

Before the Adam Walsh Act was passed by Congress in 2006, Representative Robert Scott (D-VA) expressed his anguish to colleagues for the haste with which the Act was legislated. Representative Scott stated:

The crimes committed against the children named in the bill, those not named, and the suffering of their families is a tragedy for all of us, yet this does not release us from the responsibility to legislate on a sound and reasoned basis. I believe the situation is serious and grave enough to warrant a bill that is based on approaches that have been proven to reduce this scourge in our society, not on sound bites that will merely pander to our emotions.⁴

Data shows that the over-inclusive, offense-based design of SORNA is an extremely poor method of protecting the public from “vicious attacks by violent sexual predators.”⁵ In practice, the poor predictive quality of SORNA may be more harmful to the public than it is protective, creating a false sense of security and exhausting valuable resources and limited manpower on tracking the “wrong offenders”; that is, individuals not likely to ever reoffend sexually.⁶

The Application of Legislation Designed to Track Adult Sex Offenders to Children

Registration and community notification laws were developed in response to several tragic, high-profile cases where young children were kidnapped, sexually assaulted, and, in some cases, murdered.⁷ The intended purpose of SORNA is to prevent other children from becoming victims of sexual assault.⁸ However, research showing that registration and notification laws are successful in preventing future sex crimes is markedly absent. The effects of these laws on juveniles and other low risk offenders may do more harm than good.^{9, 10}

Several states apply judicial discretion when deciding whether a child must register and to determine whether a child's personal information and photograph should be made available on public web sites. Under SORNA, our children will become subject to the strictest sex offender registration and notification requirements in United States and world history. The SORNA Guidelines require that children and adolescents be placed on the same registries with adults, conceivably placing their "awkward pubescent mug shots among those of adult felons."¹¹ Notably, many young offenders could be banned from public parks, movie theaters and even schools. Fliers detailing some children's offenses and identifying information will be mailed out to their neighbors. Some youthful offenders will be required to register publicly as sex offenders for the rest of their lives.

Fear and fallacy, rather than reality and empirical evidence, drove the expansion of sex registration and community notification laws to include children

Rather than rational, logical, and intelligent discussion – fear, anger, and misunderstanding have driven the impassioned legislation behind SORNA's inclusion of children adjudicated delinquent of sex offenses. There has been no cogent dialogue regarding the efficacy and constitutionality of sex offender registration and notification laws. When it comes to sex offender legislation, myths and misconceptions about sexual offending, especially juvenile sexual offending behavior, have misguided our system of democracy and chilled the usual political and judicial protections that guide the legislative process.

A review of the legislative history of the Adam Walsh Act reveals little about Congress's rationale for its dramatic departure from the Wetterling Act¹² and Megan's Law's treatment of child offenders.¹³ Supporters of the bill¹⁴ unflinchingly spoke about how its passage was critical to protecting the nation's children. Missing from the record was any explanation of how the bill would actually protect communities from child predators.¹⁵

In June 2005, the U.S. House Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism and Homeland Security held three hearings to discuss proposed bills and develop a consensus on the need for a national sex offender registry and notification system. Nearly a year later, on March 8, 2006, the House of Representatives held a 40-minute discussion on the Adam Walsh Act and passed it on a suspended calendar, meaning that there were no hearings, amendments, or committee markups on the bill.¹⁶ No experts were invited to testify for or against the Adam Walsh Act in its entirety. This lack of due diligence frustrated some of the Congressman on Capitol Hill who have extensive knowledge on criminal and juvenile justice policy. During the March 2006 discussion, Representative John Conyers (D-MI) noted that "this legislation, all 164 pages, has managed to completely circumvent the traditional legislative process."¹⁷ In a July 2006 discussion on the Act, Representative Scott (D-VA) avowed that "unlike most of my colleagues we will hear from today, I believe that we can do better than this bill to effectively address the scourge of child sexual assault."¹⁸ President Bush signed The Adam Walsh Act into law on July 27, 2006.

Regretfully, an examination of the legislative history of the Adam Walsh Act reveals that several members of Congress based their support of this bill on inaccurate data. In their "efforts to protect children," lawmakers misinformed their peers that individuals convicted of sex offenses are more serious offenders because of their propensity to re-offend. The relevant statistical data actually indicates the contrary: people convicted of sex offenses have one of the lowest recidivism rates of any group, yet policymakers cling to the myth that people convicted of sex offenses have one of the highest recidivism rates of any group.¹⁹ Among the sensationalized soundbytes readily repeated to justify the passage of SORNA:

- Attorney General Charlie Crist of Florida testified, "[t]he experts tell us that someone who has molested a child will do it again and again."²⁰
- U.S. Representative Ric Keller (R-FL) noted that "[t]he best way to protect children is to keep child predators locked up in the first place, because someone who has molested a child will do it again and again and again."²¹
- Ernie Allen, President and CEO of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children testified that "[s]ex offenders represent the highest risk of re-offense."²²

Contrary to these policymakers' assertions, research demonstrates that individuals convicted of sexual offenses do not inevitably commit new sex offenses.

In 1998, researchers Hanson and Bussiere did a meta-analysis of sixty-one separate studies on patterns of recidivism for people convicted of sex offenses. They concluded that 13.4 % of the 23,393 individuals in the study committed a new sexual offense.²³ Large-scale studies of recidivism find that recidivism rates of convicted sex offenders released from prison (13.4%) are significantly lower than those of non-sexual offenses (67%).²⁴

Empirical evidence shows that registration and notification of juvenile sex offenders does not have a significant influence on recidivism rates

Even more compelling, the recidivism rates of children adjudicated delinquent of sexual offenses are even lower. Subjecting juveniles to long term registration and notification policies fails to improve community safety.

Does Juvenile Sex Offending Predict Adult Sex Offending?

The short answer is "No."²⁵ *Empirically rigorous studies consistently fail to find a relationship between juvenile sex crimes and adult sex crimes.*²⁶ Consequently, legal policies that target juvenile sex offenders have limited, if any, capability to reduce potential future sex crimes. The available literature indicates that registration and notification of juvenile sex offenders neither deters initial sex crimes by previous non-offenders,²⁷ nor has a significant influence on recidivism of known juvenile sex offenders.²⁸

A Recent Study Shows that the Recidivism Rate of Juveniles Adjudicated Delinquent of Sexual Offenses is Lower than One Percent.

In a recent study by Dr. Elizabeth LeTourneau, registered and nonregistered male youth were matched on year of index offense, age at index offense, race, prior person offenses, prior nonperson offenses, and type of index sexual offense (111 matched pairs). Recidivism was assessed across an average 4-year follow-up. *The sexual offense reconviction rate was less than 1% (just two events for 222 youth), too low to support between-groups analyses.*²⁹ More compelling, the nonsexual violent offense re-adjudication did not differ between registered and nonregistered juveniles. This study showed that SORNA-like registration systems³⁰ failed to influence sexual and nonsexual violent recidivism rates in both studies.

The studies compiled by University of California-Berkeley Professor of Law Franklin E. Zimring explored whether juvenile sexual offenders continue to commit sexual offenses into adulthood. The empirical data revealed that over 92% of all individuals who committed a sex offense as a juvenile did not commit another sex offense.³¹ Children tend to mature out of sexual offending behavior and are not likely to commit another sexual offense.

There is a big difference between the sex offender legislation passed in the early 1990's and the new federal law. SORNA's expansion to children adjudicated delinquent is a significant departure from earlier legislative attempts to reduce instances of sexual assault. For all intended purposes, SORNA expanded the definition of a "criminal conviction" to include an "adjudication of delinquency" of a child. The treatment of children as smaller, younger versions of adult sexual offenders is predominately based on the misconception that children have the same propensity to reoffend as their adult counterparts. That is, it is wrongly assumed that children and adolescents are on a singular trajectory to becoming adult sexual offenders.³²

Children adjudicated delinquent of a sexual offense should not be subjected to registration. Long-term registration based on a youth's adjudication offense fails to identify high risk youth, fails to reduce sexual or violent recidivism, fails to deter first-time juvenile sex crimes, and influences judicial case processing in ways that might actually impair community safety. Moreover, youth who are labeled for life as sex offenders will face innumerable barriers to successful prosocial development. These children may face public notification and collateral consequences such as residency restrictions and even restrictions on attending public schools based solely on their registration status.

The main goal of this survey is to provide a comprehensive reference guide to the various juvenile sex offender registration systems employed in the United States. Additionally, it is our hope that this compilation of laws will highlight the gaps in our knowledge about child and adolescent sexual offending behavior. The Snapshot will serve as a critical first step to further the dialogue on the practicality, utility and constitutionality of expanding sex offender registration laws designed to track adult offenders to children.

It is the expectation of the authors that the Snapshot will help create a platform – or at least a starting point – for informed proposals for reform in Federal and State juvenile sex offender legislation and policies.

HISTORY AND ORIGINS OF SEX OFFENDER REGISTRY LAWS

This section traces the development of federal sex offender registration and notification laws in the United States. This history demonstrates the hasty process by which children were incorporated into the registration and notification laws originally created for certain adult convicted sex offenders.

The federalization of sex offender registration and notification laws in the United States was inspired by a small number of particularly heinous, high profile offenses against women and children in the 1980's and 1990's. Federal lawmakers seized upon politically popular issues and committed themselves to "protecting children from violent sexual predators."^{33, 34}

Sex Offender Registration and Notification Laws

The state systems legislated in the 1990's, and presently enforced, are a mix of two different methods for identifying and tracking persons convicted of sex crimes: 1) a registration requirement, and, 2) a community notification system.

As originally defined by federal statutes, registration and notification were distinct law enforcement tools. Registration was required for certain adult sex offenders while community notification was reserved for specific offenders classified as being at a high risk to reoffend. Over the past decade, the distinction between registration requirements and notification procedures has blurred considerably. Today, most notification systems publicly identify all registrants, regardless of individual risk classifications. This makes the entire registry public by way of the internet, rather than reserving public internet notification only for individuals identified to be at a high risk to reoffend. Registration was originally designed to enable law enforcement officials to track the residence and activities of dangerous adult sex offenders after their release into the community.

The Jacob Wetterling Crimes Against Children and Sexually Violent Offender Act

The first federal sex offender registration law was passed in 1994. The Jacob Wetterling Crimes Against Children and Sexually Violent Offender Act ("Wetterling Act") was passed in response to the 1989 abduction of an 11-year old boy in St. Joseph, Minnesota. An unknown man abducted Jacob Wetterling while he was riding his bike; Jacob is still missing.³⁵

While the police conducted their investigation into Jacob's disappearance, his mother asked detectives what would have helped them find her son. Police investigators said that it would have helped to know what type of offenders were living in the area. Patty Wetterling, determined to give law enforcement every possible tool to track down her child's abductor, began pushing for a sex offender law in the State of Minnesota and soon managed to get a local registration law passed in the state. In 1994, Congress made the Wetterling Act a federal law.

The Wetterling Act marked the first attempt by the Federal Government to require and control state sex offender registration systems.³⁶ To encourage compliance with the Act, Congress conditioned states' receipt of federal anti-crime funds on the implementation of sex offender registries.

The Act directed the United States Attorney General to establish a national database of sex offenders within the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), to be maintained and accessed by law enforcement agencies. The registry was intended to aid law enforcement agencies in their investigation of sexual crimes and child abductions, allowing for easy identification of the 'usual suspects'³⁷ and selective distribution of information to the public when necessary.

Megan's Law and The Pam Lychner Sexual Violent Offender Tracking and Identification Act

In 1996, Congress passed Megan's Law and the Pam Lychner Sexual Violent Offender Tracking and Identification Act. These federal laws amended the Wetterling Act by encouraging states to develop community notification procedures and provide easily accessible information about convicted sex offenders to the public.

Megan's Law gives discretion to the states to establish criteria for public disclosure, but compels them to make specific information about registered sex offenders available to the public. When President Clinton signed Megan's Law in 1996, the federal government reasoned that such public notification would: (1) assist law enforcement in investigations, (2) establish legal grounds to detain known sexual offenders, (3) deter sex offenders from committing new offenses, and, (4) offer communities information they could use to protect children from victimization.³⁸ The adoption of Megan's Law highlights the shift away from the narrower and more precise registration systems of the past, to the more widely cast nets of community notification in place today.

Congress passed Megan's Law in response to the abduction and murder of seven-year old New Jersey resident Megan Kanka. Megan's adult attacker, previously convicted of child molestation, lived near her home in a community release program. In testimony before Congress, Megan's parents, Richard and Maureen Kanka, asserted that they would have been more vigilant had they known about the offenders' presence.

Sex Offender Community Notification Laws

Historically, community notification requirements applied only to individuals identified as "potentially dangerous sex offenders."³⁹ However, community notification systems proliferated rapidly after the passage of Megan's Law. Often referred to as "public registration," community notification consists of a publicly accessible registry that allows private citizens to access identifying information about convicted sex offenders. Some form of community notification for adult sex offenders has been present in all fifty States and the District of Columbia since 1996.

Amendments to Community Notification Laws

The second amendment to the Wetterling Act was the Pam Lyncher Sexual Offender Tracking and Identification Act of 1996. Pam Lyncher was a 31-year old woman who was attacked by a previously convicted adult sexual offender in Houston, Texas. The Pam Lychner Act provided for a national database to track sex offenders and subjected those convicted of an aggravated sex offense or multiple registerable sex offenses to lifetime registration and notification requirements. The Act further amended the scope of community notification and required the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) to develop a national database of names and addresses of certain convicted sex offenders released from prison. The Lychner Act broadened the tracking of sexual offenders beyond the state level, linking the states with a national registry. Currently, there are over 720,000 registered sex offenders in the United States.⁴⁰

The Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006

In an effort to standardize registration systems, the federal government passed the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act ("Adam Walsh Act") in July 2006. This law was passed in response to the high profile 1981 abduction and murder of Adam Walsh, the six-year old son of America's Most Wanted host John Walsh.⁴¹

Title I of the Adam Walsh Act, the Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act ("SORNA"), contains the registration and notification provisions discussed herein. SORNA provides a set of federal guidelines directing the states, the District of Columbia, principal U.S. Territories, and federally recognized tribal territories to expand the breadth of registration and notification laws.⁴² Most notably under SORNA, juveniles adjudicated delinquent of certain serious sexual offenses are treated in the same manner as adult sex offenders, and must register with local law enforcement.

SORNA originally gave jurisdictions three years from the date the Act was signed by President Bush, July 27, 2006, to comply with the provisions set forth in SORNA. The initial deadline for states to comply was July 27, 2009. In May 2009, the deadline was extended to July 2010 when US Attorney General Eric Holder issued a one-year blanket extension delaying implementation date of SORNA to give states and the federal government additional time to work out the problems with the Act. Nearly five years after the Act was signed into law, no jurisdiction has completely implemented SORNA; only twelve jurisdictions have "substantially" implemented the law.⁴³ The new deadline for state compliance is July 27, 2011. With less than a year before the final deadline, several states have signaled that they still are unable to implement SORNA. States that fail to comply with the Federal SORNA in a timely manner will forfeit 10% of their Byrne Memorial Justice Assistance Grant (JAG) Omnibus Crime federal funding.

WHICH STATES POST PICTURES OF CHILDREN ON THEIR SEX OFFENDER PUBLIC WEBSITES?

At this time, notification by posting photographs on the Web depends on many different—and difficult to ascertain—factors. Some jurisdictions do not post the picture of juveniles unless they re-offend sexually; others post the image of a child on the Web for a lifetime.

“Sex offender public notification” is the distribution of private and public information regarding sex offenders to citizens and their surrounding communities. Public notification laws have evolved over time since the passage of Megan’s Law in 1996. Jurisdictions mandate that law enforcement agents notify the public about certain sex offenders in their communities. One method of notification is through publicly accessible Web sites. A 2007 study by Brenda V. Smith, a law professor and the director of the National Institute of Corrections Project on Addressing Prison Rape at American University’s Washington College of Law, revealed that at least twenty-five states apply public internet community notification to juveniles. “That means on many state sex-offender Web sites, you can find juveniles’ photos, names and addresses, and in some cases their birth dates and maps to their homes, alongside those of pedophiles and adult rapists.”

One study about the implications of registration laws on juvenile sex offenders supports these and other concerns, noting that “registration statutes...harm youth more than they provide safety to the community.” Concern about the potential for collateral consequences—as well as a growing awareness of empirical studies and literature about child sexual offending behavior—has prompted some states to develop specialized approaches to registration and notification for juvenile offenders.

Among states that do include juveniles in community notification laws, there is little consistency in terms of who is eligible and for how long. Some jurisdictions allow judicial discretion on whether to include juveniles or to permit youths to petition for removal after a number of years. In some states, a juvenile has to be 14 to be listed on public sex-offender registries; in others, they may be eligible at 10 or 12.

The Supplemental Guidelines, issued on January 11, 2011 by the United States Department of Justice, modified certain features of the SORNA Final Guidelines to make a change required by the KIDS Act and to address other issues arising in jurisdictions’ implementation of the SORNA requirements. After receiving hundreds of public comments criticizing the juvenile provisions of SORNA, United States Attorney General Eric Holder created a discretionary exemption for internet posting of juveniles.

To reiterate, the Supplemental Guidelines released in January 2011 provide that there is no remaining requirement under SORNA that jurisdictions engage in any form of public disclosure or notification regarding juvenile delinquent sex offenders. Unfortunately, “SORNA provides a floor, not a ceiling” and jurisdictions continue to require the website posting of juveniles to a greater extent than required by the Act.

Title I of the Adam Walsh Act, the Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act (“SORNA”), contains the registration and notification regulations discussed herein. SORNA establishes federal guidelines directing the states, the District of Columbia, principal U.S. territories, and federally-recognized tribal territories to expand the breadth of registration and notification laws. Compliance with SORNA will require jurisdictions to implement drastically different sex offender registration and notification systems. Compliance requires the expansion of state registries and notification systems to: retroactively include children, increase the number of offenses for which registration is required, require registered offenders to keep their information current in each jurisdiction in which they reside, work, and attend school, and reclassify the risk level of each sex offender based solely on the crime of conviction or adjudication. States that fail to comply with SORNA will forfeit 10% of their Omnibus Crime federal funding.¹

Ultimately, Congress concluded that “the patchwork of standards that had resulted from piecemeal amendments should be replaced with a comprehensive new set of standards—the SORNA reforms—that would close potential gaps and loopholes under the old law, and generally strengthen the nationwide network of sex offender registration and notification programs.”² Although the goal of the Adam Walsh Act was to increase public safety, no empirical examinations have proven that SORNA effectively protects communities from instances of sexual assault.

Switching from a Risk Assessment-Based System to an Offense-Based Registration System only makes it More Difficult to Identify Registered Sex Offenders who are More Likely to Reoffend

The SORNA Guidelines require jurisdictions to eliminate the use of risk assessment tools to help identify those offenders who are likely to reoffend. Instead jurisdictions are required to use crime of conviction or adjudication as the sole means to classify offenders. This requirement has been put in place despite a lack of empirical research supporting crime of conviction or adjudication as predicting likelihood of recidivism.

SORNA’s offense-based tier system is an extremely faulty alternative to an actuarial risk-based classification. Decisions about risk of reoffense should not be based exclusively on any one factor or assessment. Results from actuarial assessments, such as the J-SOAP-II,³ should always be used as part of a comprehensive risk assessment analysis. Similarly, there is no clarity as to whether a single conviction or adjudication justifies the extraordinary application of sex offender registration and notification requirements on children and adolescents.⁴ Many state justice officials fear that the “one-size-fits-all,” offense-based registration system imposed by SORNA will place low-risk offenders on the registry with high-risk predators, diluting the effectiveness and ultimately circumventing the purpose of the registry.⁵

When assessing risk with sex offenders in general, and with juveniles in particular, the stakes are often very high. In assessing the risk posed by a juvenile, we have an enormous burden of responsibility.⁶ Decisions based on evaluations can have a profound impact, possibly resulting in severe, life-altering consequences for low-risk youths.

Individuals convicted or adjudicated of sex offenses differ greatly in their level of impulsiveness, persistence, risk to the community, and individual desire to change their deviant behavior. It is imperative that professionals assessing the risk of adolescent sexual offending be well versed in the unique challenges involved in assessing this population. Unlike adults, adolescents are still very much “in flux.”⁷ No aspect of their development, including their cognitive development, is fixed or stable. In addition, their life circumstances are often very unstable. In a very real sense, we are trying to assess the risk of “moving targets.”⁸ Assigning sex offender tiers based on crime of conviction tells us very little about an individual’s realistic risk for re-offense.⁹ SORNA’s offense-based design adds more nonviolent offenders to the registry (many added retroactively for convictions from years, even decades, ago). While the sex offender registration database grows exponentially, funding for monitoring sex offenders is on the decline. Fewer officers monitoring more people will lead to a dramatic, and foreseeable, drop in community safety.

Data shows that the current design of SORNA, as it applies to juvenile sexual offenders, is an extremely poor method of protecting the public from “vicious attacks by violent sexual predators.”¹⁰ In fact, the poor predictive quality of SORNA may be more harmful to the public than protective, creating a false sense of security and exhausting valuable resources and limited manpower on tracking the wrong offenders.¹¹

By late-June 2011, twelve (12) of the 248 jurisdictions controlled by SORNA have been deemed in compliance with the federal SORNA Guidelines.¹² An analysis of the twelve jurisdictions deemed to be in substantial compliance with the Act provides no evidence of a move toward a “comprehensive” system of registration. In fact, jurisdictions that rushed to amend their sex offender laws to comply with SORNA are discovering that they have gone from bad to worse. They are left instead with a flawed law that does very little to increase public safety and is prohibitively costly to implement and maintain.¹³

Despite the explosion of these laws over the past twenty years, little work has been done to examine the effectiveness of registration and notification laws on sexual offense rates. SORNA is profoundly different from its predecessors. The nature and breadth of the registration and notification requirements of SORNA demand an examination of the efficacy of such laws for a number of reasons. First, the law imposes a huge financial burden on jurisdictions; second, the federal law subjects individuals as young as fourteen years old to lifetime registration and notification requirements.¹⁴ Some jurisdictions have chosen to subject children younger than fourteen years old to SORNA. In the State of Delaware, there are approximately 639 children on the sex offender registry. Fifty-five of these children are UNDER the age of twelve. Delaware has a handful of children as young as nine years old registering as “sex offenders.”

In the late 1980’s and mid-1990’s, the ‘juvenile sex offender’ was not a high priority in registration and notification legislation. The federal laws that set the standards for state registration and notification neither required nor prohibited juvenile registration. In 1996, some form of Megan’s Law became a universal element of criminal justice in all fifty states.¹⁵ However by the mid-1990’s, around the time of the rise of the myth of the child “super-predator,”¹⁶ many state sex offender registration laws were amended to include children adjudicated delinquent of sex offenses. The system that evolved arbitrarily classified children using the same criteria as adult sex offenders.

Critics have pointed out practical and normative problems with this political motivation and with some of these harsh policies, especially when applied to children.¹⁷ In addition to fears of repeat offenders, recent decades have been marked by periods of intense media coverage of the “special threat” posed by juvenile delinquents. For example, presidential candidate Bob Dole famously pontificated during his 1996 campaign, “[u]nless something is done soon, some of today’s newborns will become tomorrow’s superpredators—merciless criminals capable of committing the most vicious of acts for the most trivial of reasons.”¹⁸ Popularized by scholars like John Dilulio, who coined the term “superpredator,”¹⁹ youth involved in criminal activity were labeled as symbols of danger, and are responsible for compelling government intervention in the name of public safety. Until now, the most destructive myth about juvenile crime was the creation of the super-predator myth.²⁰ Criminologists suggested that “the rise in violent arrests of juveniles in the early 1990s would combine with a growing youth population to produce an extended crime epidemic.”²¹ This dire prediction proved inaccurate.²² Juvenile crime rates began a steady decline beginning in 1994, reaching low levels not seen since the late 1970s. Like the misconceptions about juvenile sexual offending behavior²³, the “superpredator” myth was based in part on a misinterpretation of the research of Wolfgang, Figlio, and Sellin (1972), which found that “a small number of juveniles accounted for a large number of juvenile arrests.” Overzealous criminologists applied this number to the entire growth in the youth population to manufacture inaccurate trends. Academic purveyors of the super-predator myth used overheated rhetoric to scare the public and incite politicians to exploit these mythologies to garner electoral support or to push through funding for their pet projects. The general public bought into these myths, as evidenced by numerous opinion polls illustrating the perception that juvenile crime rates were raging out of control.²⁴

Similarly, since the passage of the Adam Walsh Act in 2006, numerous critics have witnessed the unintended and punitive consequences that result when children are enveloped in a law enforcement program designed for adults.

In a recent national survey on the barriers to SORNA implementation, commissioned by U.S. Senator Patrick Leahy (D-VT), the most commonly cited barrier to SORNA compliance listed by twenty-three states was the Act’s juvenile registration and reporting requirements. SORNA expands the definition of a “conviction” to include children adjudicated delinquent on their sex offender registries and can subject them to the same public disclosure as their adult counterparts. Children adjudicated delinquent can now have their names, addresses, photographs, and even the name and address of the schools they attend made public. Previous sex offender legislation had allowed jurisdictions to decide for themselves how to treat juveniles adjudicated delinquent of sexual offenses.

Presently, the laws differ widely on registration and notification requirements for children adjudicated delinquent of sex offenses. There are over thirty state registration and notification systems covering juveniles. Sections IV, V, and IV of the Snapshot provide a detailed and comprehensive look at the registration and notification laws applied to children in the fifty states and the District of Columbia. The juvenile registration and notification systems run the gamut from states that treat juvenile adjudications like criminal convictions, states that have one registry for both adults and juveniles but use separate administrative procedures and registration and notification guidelines for children, and other states that use separate registration and notification laws for juveniles and adults.

Not only is there a wide variation in state juvenile registration requirements; the legislative intent among the laws is often unclear and tends to be interpreted inconsistently. To date, ten jurisdictions are silent on the question of whether juvenile adjudications fall within the purview of registration and notification sanctions. Different courts of equal jurisdiction in the same state have interpreted this legislative silence in vastly different ways, leading to profound uncertainty and unpredictability in the law.

Adding to this uncertainty, jurisdictions have begun to hastily introduce indiscriminate SORNA-esque legislation in a frantic effort to come into compliance with the SORNA Guidelines and to retain federal funding. This rush to amend local sex offender registration and notification laws has left jurisdictions with burdensome, over-inclusive registration systems that force states to legislate without regard to cost or resources spent and ignore empirical research on juvenile re-offending.

The mandatory expansion of registration and notification to include youth will trigger significant, harmful consequences to children adjudicated delinquent of sexual offenses. As a consequence of implementation, many children accused of sexual misconduct will be required to register personal information on publicly available internet websites. SORNA casts an overly-wide net that will engulf individuals not likely to ever reoffend, and forces children adjudicated delinquent of pubescent-like, exploratory behaviors often committed out of curiosity, to register for the rest of their lives.

Additionally, SORNA’s retroactive reach will impose registration and notification restraints upon individuals who have since been rehabilitated and have not reoffended sexually. The retroactive application of SORNA’s juvenile registration provisions will disparately affect people of all ages – not only juveniles. Thousands of the affected individuals will have been adjudicated delinquent years or even decades before SORNA’s enactment, many of whom have gone on with their lives to build families, homes, and careers. For these rehabilitated individuals, sex offender registration and reporting will disrupt the stability of their lives and ostracize them from their communities by drawing attention to decades-old sex offenses committed as youths. The retroactive application of SORNA’s registration and reporting provisions by former juvenile offenders imposes immense burdens, not only through onerous in-person registration and reporting requirements, but, more importantly, through the publication and dissemination of highly prejudicial juvenile adjudication records of individuals who have committed no offenses since their adolescence.²⁵

Wide-Scale Registration and Community Notification of Sex Offenders is Unprecedented in the History of American Jurisprudence

No class of offender has been subject to such dramatic post-release requirements as contemporary “sex offenders.” In a span of twelve years from 1994 to 2006, Congress passed four separate acts pertaining to the registration and notification of sexual offenders, each building on the restrictions of the last, without any examination of the laws’ effectiveness on reducing incidents of sexual assault. Despite the absence of any empirical research into the efficacy of these requirements, SORNA sailed through Congress with nearly unanimous support. The legislative history reveals that the Act was passed solely on the basis of the oft-repeated – and untested – premise that registries are the best way for communities to protect themselves from incidents of sexual violence.

In opposition to the Adam Walsh Act, Representative Robert Scott (D-VA) pointed out to his colleagues that “there are certainly no studies to show that [sex offender registration laws] have reduced by any measurable amounts the amount of child sexual abuse.”²⁶ In fact, “[b]ecause the people who are the subject of [sex offender registration laws] are unable to get a job, unable to live in any kind of neighborhood, have nothing to lose . . . all of these things may in fact increase crime.”²⁷

SORNA Establishes a Whole New Brand of Sex Offender Registration and Notification Legislation, Placing Children on Registries for Sexual Misconduct

Early versions of the Adam Walsh Act applied only to individuals convicted as adults for sex offenses.²⁸ The Amie Zyla provision,²⁹ one of the final revisions to the Act, expanded the definition of a “sex offender” to include juveniles adjudicated delinquent of certain sexual offenses. Like Megan’s Law and its progeny, the Zyla expansion was hastily passed by the United States Congress in response to a high profile sexual assault.³⁰

This change did not just make it mandatory for jurisdictions to include children convicted in adult court on their sex offender registries; jurisdictions also had to retroactively extend registration and notification requirements to children whose cases were handled in family court before the Act’s enactment.

Representative Scott, perhaps one of the most proficient U.S. Congressmen on juvenile justice issues, eloquently expressed the fault in requiring children to register as sex offenders. The Congressman stated that despite extensive research he had seen “no study that suggests that the policy of posting the name of juvenile delinquents, as [SORNA] does, on the Internet, serves any constructive purpose.”³¹ Congressman Scott astutely noted that research shows “programs and grants to assist children and to provide the type of sex offender treatment that studies have been shown that can [sic] cut recidivism in half are not in this bill.”³²

Before the passage of SORNA, at least thirty states required some form of public notification for juveniles adjudicated delinquent of certain sexual offenses. Some states list all sex offenders living in the community without categorizing them within various risk groups; many states classify the offenders by their level of risk according to an actuarial assessment instrument (e.g. two commonly used juvenile assessment instruments are the J-SOAP³³ and ERASOR.³⁴) More frequently, however, jurisdictions are adopting a tiered classification system as they attempt to come into compliance with SORNA. SORNA requires a three-tier classification system of registration based solely on the crime for which the child was adjudicated delinquent, eliminating judicial discretion and risk assessment.

Professor Zimring discussed the harm caused by including children on offense-based sex offender registries, and the startling lack of predictive power juvenile sex charges have in identifying further sexual offending:

Might this registry be effective nonetheless by providing the police with a reliable group of potential suspects? The problem here would be that 92 percent of all the adult male sex offenders were never juvenile sex offenders so the registry would be a very poor predictive tool. If this juvenile registry was used to "round up the usual suspects," 49 persons would have been needlessly predicted as sexually dangerous for every truly dangerous person so concerned, and more than 92 percent of true offenders would not have been on the registry. That appears to be a poor prediction tool for police and prosecutors and a prediction made about adult sex recidivism risk that would be wrong about 98 percent of the time.

30 Amie Zyla of Waukesha, Wisconsin was 8 years old when she was sexually assaulted and threatened by 14 year old Joshua Wade. Wade was adjudicated delinquent in juvenile court, and was therefore required under Wisconsin law to register with local police as a sex offender. Less than a decade later, while still being monitored as a sex offender, Wade was arrested for assaulting and enticing children to his apartment. Wade was never convicted of these charges. However, Amie Zyla and her parents were successful in lobbying to the State Legislature to take some additional action against children accused of sexual misconduct. Amie and her parents then took their cause to Washington, DC, where they successfully lobbied Congress to expand sex offender registration and notification under SORNA to children.

Supporters of the Zyla expansion unfailingly spoke about how the provision was critical to protecting the nation's children. But absent from the closed door discussions were any expert testimony or scientific evidence to support claims that this dramatic revision of sex offender registration laws and treatment of children in the juvenile justice system would do anything to enhance public safety. In fact there was very little discussion at all regarding the Zyla expansion and the potentially detrimental impact on society likely to emerge from the inclusion of children in registration and community notification laws.

GUIDE TO SORNA

Section III features a Guide to the Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act (SORNA). The section is comprised of three parts: a Terminology Guide, a primer on what constitutes an Offense Requiring Registration under SORNA, and a narrative and brief chart with updated information on those jurisdictions deemed by the U.S. Department of Justice to be in “substantial compliance” with SORNA as of May 1, 2011, the date the Snapshot was taken.

PART A: TERMINOLOGY

The Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act (SORNA) defines certain terms in very specific ways to provide a floor, rather than a ceiling, for sex offender registration and notification requirements.¹ Jurisdictions' registration laws must meet these minimum standards to be considered compliant by the July 27, 2011 deadline.² The SORNA Guidelines significantly redefine commonly used criminal justice terms.³ For example, the term "criminal conviction" as used by SORNA has a meaning unique to federal criminal law. SORNA expands the term convicted to include an adjudication of delinquency as a juvenile.⁴

This section is a compilation of terms, as defined by the Federal SORNA Guidelines and as they are used by the authors throughout the Snapshot.

Adjudication – Under the Federal Juvenile Delinquency Act (FJDA) 18 U.S.C. § 5031, an adjudication of delinquency refers to the outcome of a family (or juvenile) court prosecution that concludes in a judgment of guilty as charged for a violation of the criminal law committed by a minor.⁵ The terms adjudication of delinquency and adjudicated delinquent refer to a crime that if committed by an adult would be considered a criminal conviction.

Under SORNA an adjudication of delinquency of a child for certain sexual offenses is a conviction.

Conviction – The terms conviction and convicted refer to a final judgment on a verdict of guilty, a plea of guilty, or a plea of nolo contendere.

Under SORNA, a “sex offender” means “an individual who is convicted of a sex offense.” A sex offender is “convicted” for SORNA purposes if the individual has been subject to penal consequences based on that conviction.⁶ SORNA “convictions” include convictions of children who are prosecuted as adults in criminal court as well as children adjudicated delinquent in juvenile or family court.⁷ SORNA is the first federal law to include children in sex offender registration and notification systems. The SORNA Guidelines require that any individual, 14 years of age or older, committing (or attempting or conspiring to commit) certain sexual acts will be subject to sex offender registration and notification.⁸

Incoming Juvenile Sex Offender – Under SORNA, incoming juvenile sex offender refers to a registered child moving from one jurisdiction to a new jurisdiction. Under the SORNA Guidelines, a child who is required to register in their original jurisdiction must register in the new jurisdiction, regardless of whether that new jurisdiction requires registration for juveniles adjudicated delinquent of sex offenses. A juvenile not required to register in his or her original jurisdiction may or may not have to register in his or her new jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction – A total of 248 jurisdictions are regulated by the Act. The SORNA Guidelines define a “jurisdiction” as the 50 States, the District of Columbia, the five principal U.S. Territories, and the 192 federally recognized Native American Tribes that elected to function as registration jurisdictions under SORNA.

Note: Even though SORNA applies to the 248 jurisdictions there were not enough resources to research and report on the laws in all SORNA jurisdictions. The status of sex registration and notification within the Native American Tribes and U.S. Territories is so intricate, vital and complex, it would be irresponsible to attempt to capture within this brief survey. Even though this book only focuses on the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and Guam, the status of laws within the Native American Tribes and U.S. Territories should be considered equally important. A separate book should be written to solely address the complexities of sex offender registration and notification laws within the Native American Tribes and U.S. Territories.

Juvenile Sex Offender – The term juvenile sex offender refers to ‘a juvenile adjudicated delinquent of a sexual offense.’ The use of the term “juvenile sex offender” is not intended as commentary on guilt, deviance, proclivity, risk of reoffending, or mental state. “Juvenile sex offender” describes only a legal status to which registration and notification requirements may attach.

Moving – Moving in this survey refers to a child required to register as a sex offender who will or is moving to a new residence, either within the same state or out-of-state. SORNA requires registered sex offenders to report changes in address as well as changes in employment and educational institution. Each jurisdiction has laws that stipulate how many days prior to moving a sex offender must notify law enforcement.

Petitioning – Sex offenders may be able to petition for removal from the registry, have the required duration of registry reduced, gain a change or reduction in classification, or be exempted from community notification requirements.

Minimum Age – “Minimum age” refers to the age at the time of offense that a juvenile adjudicated delinquent of a registerable offense may be required to register as a sex offender.

Non-Public Registration – When information is not disclosed to the public, and is available only to law enforcement agencies for public safety purposes, it is considered non-public. However, what limitations on disclosure actually constitute “non-public registration” vary widely from jurisdiction to jurisdiction.

Sexual Act – The SORNA definition of sexual act mirrors the definition of “sexual act” as defined by 18 U.S.C. § 2246(2), which applies to the “aggravated sexual abuse” offense.⁹ The Guidelines advise that for purposes of SORNA, a “sexual act” should be understood to include any of the following: (i) oral-genital or oral-anal-contact, (ii) any degree of genital or anal penetration, and (iii) direct genital touching of a child under the age of sixteen.¹⁰

The definition of the federal “aggravated sexual abuse” offense as applied to juveniles¹¹ includes offenses under a jurisdiction’s laws that are “comparable to”: engaging in a sexual act with another by force or threat of serious violence (18 U.S.C. § 2241(a)); and engaging in a sexual act with another by rendering unconscious or involuntarily drugging the victim (18 U.S.C. § 2241(b)).

Sex Offender Registration – A system designed to enable law enforcement officials to keep track of the residence and activities of adult sex offenders after their release into the community.

Sexual Offender Registration Administrator(s) (SORs) – The officials assigned by the U.S. Department of Justice to oversee the sex offender registration and notification systems in each jurisdiction.

Sex Offender Public Notification – Under SORNA, sex offender public notification includes “the distribution of information regarding released sex offenders to citizens and community organizations.”¹² Notification laws have evolved over time to allow public access to information regarding individuals deemed to be sex offenders.

Please see page 8 of the Snapshot for additional information on the posting of juvenile photographs on the sex offender notification Websites.

Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act (“SORNA”) – Passed under Title I of Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006 (public Law 109-248), SORNA requires all states, the District of Columbia, U.S. Territories, and certain federally-funded Native American Tribes to create or to expand sex offender registries to include juveniles adjudicated delinquent of certain sexual offenses in juvenile court.¹³

States – Unless specified otherwise, for purposes of this book, the plural term States refers to the fifty States, and the District of Columbia.

PART B: OFFENSES REQUIRING REGISTRATION

Sex offender registration schemes developed around the misconception that any crime that can be construed as “sexually motivated” automatically necessitates registration. The Adam Walsh Act’s SORNA was motivated by the concern that registering individuals based on each jurisdiction’s public safety needs created “loopholes” and “deficiencies” that would allow thousands of registrants to be effectively “lost” by law enforcement.¹ SORNA expanded the range of sex offenses requiring registration.² Under the Act, a “sex offense” includes offenses having “an element involving a sexual act or contact with another;”³ “video voyeurism”; having possession, producing or distributing child pornography; and, most expansively “[a]ny conduct that by its nature is a sex offense against a minor.”⁴

To appease frustrated constituents and to alleviate legitimate legal and constitutional concerns with the federal Act, state legislatures have found it necessary to defy the SORNA Guidelines. Several jurisdictions amended their registration laws to allow judicial discretion over registration requirements beyond that permitted by the impracticable SORNA Guidelines. Certain states require registration for a conviction based on a “sexually motivated” crime,⁵ a crime committed “for the purpose of sexual gratification”⁶ or “vicarious sexual gratification,”⁷ and, most disturbingly, for a conviction “arising out of the same set of circumstances”⁸ as a charged offense that statutory law specifies as requiring registration.⁹

A brief look at three states’ registerable offenses is provided to help convey a sense of the wide spectrum of offenses requiring registration. The three states analyzed in this section are Arkansas, Kansas, and Maryland. In some states, like Arkansas, the registerable offenses for juveniles differ from those for adults. However, Arkansas legislation gives the courts discretion to order the same offender screening and risk assessment for “any offense with an underlying sexually motivated component” for which a juvenile has been adjudicated.¹⁰ This sort of expansive language opens the proverbial floodgates, granting expansive powers to the state to submit juveniles to registration for crimes the legislature never contemplated. Kansas has similar language, holding juveniles and adults to registration requirements for the same specific offenses, in addition to registration for any act deemed “sexually motivated.”¹¹ Finally, in the minority, there are states like Maryland, that have differing registerable offenses targeted specifically to juvenile offenders.¹² These three states are representative of the jurisdictions covered in the Snapshot, embodying the scattered, incongruent and perplexing attempts to comply with SORNA. A brief summary of each state’s registerable offenses is followed by an in-description of the offenses and the elements constituting each.

OFFENSES REQUIRING REGISTRATION: ARKANSAS

State where registerable offenses for juveniles differ from those for adults and are assessed at levels

REGISTERABLE OFFENSES FOR JUVENILES IN ARKANSAS

In Arkansas, if a juvenile is adjudicated delinquent for “Rape,” “Sexual Assault in the First Degree,” “Sexual Assault in the Second Degree,” “Incest,” or “Engaging children in sexually explicit conduct for use in visual or print medium,” the court must order a sex offender screening and risk assessment. The court may order the same offender screening and risk assessment if a juvenile is adjudicated delinquent for any offense with an underlying sexually motivated component.

REGISTERABLE OFFENSES

“Rape”¹

Where there is sexual intercourse or deviate sexual activity with another person by forcible compulsion; or the victim is incapable of consent because of physical helplessness, mental defect, or mental incapacity; or the victim is less than 14 years of age²; or, the victim is a minor and the offender is a close family relative.³

“Sexual assault in the first degree”⁴

Where there is sexual intercourse or deviate sexual activity with a minor who is not the actor’s spouse, and, the actor is employed with the Department of Correction, the Department of Community Correction, the Department of Human Services, or any city or county jail or juvenile detention facility and the victim is in the custody of one of those facilities; or the actor is a mandated reporter and is in a position of trust or authority over the victim; or, the actor is an employee in the victim’s school or school district, a temporary caretaker, or a person in a position of trust or authority over the victim.⁵

“Sexual assault in the second degree”⁶

Where there is sexual contact by forcible compulsion; sexual contact with a victim who is incapable of consent because of physical helplessness, mental defect, or mental incapacity; engages in sexual activity with a child less than 14 years of age who is not the actor’s spouse, if the actor is 18 years of age or older;⁷ the actor engages in sexual contact with a minor and the actor is employed with the Department of Correction, the Department of Community Correction, or any city or county jail or juvenile detention facility and the minor is in the custody of one of those facilities; the actor is a mandated reporter and is in a position of trust or authority over the victim; or, the actor is the minor’s guardian, an employee in the minor’s school or school district, a temporary caretaker, or a person in a position of trust or authority over the minor. If the actor is a teacher in a public school and engages in sexual contact with a victim who is a student enrolled in the public school and is less than 21 years of age, it is also assault in the second degree.

“Incest”⁸

Where the actor, 16 years of age or older, purports to marry, has sexual intercourse with, or engages in deviate sexual activity with a victim 16 years of age or older whom the actor knows to be related as an ancestor or descendant, stepchild or adopted child, brother or sister of the whole or half blood, uncle, aunt, nephew, niece, step-grandchild or adopted grandchild, without regard to legitimacy.

“Engaging children in sexually explicit conduct for use in visual or print medium”⁹

Where an actor employs, uses, persuades, induces, entices, or coerces any child to engage in or assist any other person to engage in sexually explicit conduct for the purpose of producing visual or print medium depicting the sexually explicit conduct; or, any parent, legal guardian, or person having custody or control of a child who knowingly permits the child to engage in such sexually explicit conduct.

RISK ASSESSMENT

The court may order a sex offender screening and risk assessment if a juvenile is adjudicated delinquent for any offense with an underlying sexually motivated component. The court may require that a juvenile register as a sex offender upon the recommendation of the Sex Offender Assessment Committee, who then assigns a risk level to the juvenile based on its assessment. A hearing follows within 90 days of the registration motion, with counsel provided to represent the juvenile. While making the decision whether to require the juvenile to register as a delinquent sex offender, the court considers: the seriousness of the offense, the protection of society, the level of planning and participation in the alleged offense, the previous sex offender history of the juvenile, whether there are available rehabilitation facilities or programs for the juvenile prior to the expiration of the court’s jurisdiction, the sex offender assessment, and any other factors deemed relevant by the court.

State where registerable offenses are the same as for adults

REGISTERABLE OFFENSES FOR JUVENILES IN KANSAS

In Kansas, juveniles are included in a separate, non-public list if adjudicated for an act that, if committed by an adult, would constitute the commission of a sexually violent crime, including: "Rape," "Indecent liberties with a child," "Aggravated indecent liberties with a child," "Criminal sodomy," "Aggravated criminal sodomy," "Indecent solicitation of a child," "Aggravated indecent solicitation of a child," "Sexual exploitation of a child," "Sexual battery," "Aggravated sexual battery," "Aggravated incest," "Electronic solicitation," "Unlawful sexual relations," "an attempt, conspiracy or criminal solicitation of any of the aforementioned crimes," or "any act which has been determined beyond a reasonable doubt to have been sexually motivated."¹

PART C: SORNA COMPLIANCE STATUS

As of May 1, 2011, the United States Department of Justice (DOJ) has deemed only twelve jurisdictions¹ to be in “substantial compliance” with SORNA.² Five years after SORNA’s passage, less than five percent of the jurisdictions required to implement SORNA have substantially implemented the Act.

SORNA purports “to protect the public from sex offenders and offenders against children...by establish[ing] a comprehensive national system for the registration of those offenders.”³ However, a glance at the jurisdictions considered to have “substantially implemented” SORNA reveals nothing comprehensive about this sex offender registration and notification system. To the contrary, SORNA creates vastly incongruent registration and notification systems that flood the registries with low risk offenders and juveniles, and may do more harm than good to communities, the victims, and the offenders.

The SORNA Compliance Chart, located towards the end of Section III, looks at the seven states deemed to be in “substantial compliance” with SORNA as of May 1, 2011. Please note the discrepancies in the newly adopted juvenile sex offender registration and notification provisions. In particular, it is useful to compare the implementation of SORNA in Delaware with Michigan. After passing SORNA compliance legislation, the State of Delaware is left with a sex offender registration system that subjects children of any age to lifetime registration, notification, and internet postings. There are over 639 children on the Delaware sex offender registry; 55 of whom are under the age of twelve.⁴ A handful of these registered “sex offenders” are nine years old.⁵ At the other end of the spectrum, Michigan’s SORNA-compliant law allows for young children to be removed from its registry.⁶ There are over 3,500 juveniles adjudicated delinquent of sex offenses are on the sex offender registry in the State of Michigan, including children as young as nine years old. Close to 200 children between the ages of nine and twelve years old have been adjudicated delinquent and are required to register as “sex offenders” in Michigan.⁷ After years of hard work, child advocates have successfully lobbied to use SORNA-compliant legislation to improve sex offender registration laws in the State. Michigan’s SORNA-compliant legislation that went into effect on July 1, 2011 brings two significant improvements for youth adjudicated delinquent of sex offenses. The first change allows juveniles who were under the age of fourteen to petition for removal from the sex offender registry.⁸ Second, juveniles adjudicated delinquent of a sex offense will no longer be listed on the public website, and will instead only have their information listed on the non-public law enforcement database.⁹

An analysis of the jurisdictions deemed to be in substantial compliance with SORNA provides no evidence of a move toward a “comprehensive” system of sex offender registration. In fact, jurisdictions that rushed to amend their sex offender laws to comply with SORNA are discovering that they are moving further away from promise of SORNA Guidelines – “substantial compliance” of the much hyped panacea of sex offender registration and notification requirements does not appear effective in closing the “gaps and loopholes” so heavily criticized in the old system.¹⁰

HOT OFF THE PRESS

On July 7, 2011, the State of Louisiana became the eighth state deemed to be in substantial compliance with SORNA. To date, a mere thirteen of the 248 jurisdictions have “substantially implemented” SORNA. (Press Release, 2011). That is, of the total jurisdictions required to implement SORNA, only eight States, four Native American Tribes, and one U.S. Territory have been determined to be in substantial compliance with SORNA by the Department of Justice. The SMART Office is tasked with the potentially insurmountable task of bringing the remaining 235 jurisdictions in compliance with SORNA by the July 27, 2011 final deadline.

A Period in Flux

The authors made every attempt to give readers the most up-to-date information on the current status of sex offender laws. As the final deadline to comply with SORNA swiftly approaches, these last few weeks will be a period of great flux and change.

This text box, entitled, “Hot off the Press” features announcements of additional jurisdictions deemed to be in substantial compliance by the United States Department of Justice shortly before the July 27, 2011 final deadline.

It is imperative that readers remain mindful that the sex offender registration laws of jurisdictions and compliance status are likely to change as the text goes to press.

Updated on July 14, 2011.

MISSOURI

DUTY TO REGISTER

Juveniles adjudicated delinquent for sex offenses and juveniles convicted as adults for sex offenses are required to register as sex offenders. Missouri utilizes two statutes that may apply to adjudicated juvenile sex offenders. Regardless of age at the time of offense, juveniles adjudicated delinquent for sex offenses that would constitute a felony if committed by an adult will be required to register as juvenile offenders under § 211.425. If, however, the adjudicated juvenile was at least fourteen at time of an offense comparable to the definition of federal law's aggravated sexual abuse, then the juvenile will be required to register as an adult offender under Mo. REV. STAT. § 589.400 *et seq.*¹

MINIMUM AGE THAT A JUVENILE CAN BE REQUIRED TO REGISTER

No minimum age for juveniles on the non-public registry.²

MINIMUM AGE OF REGISTRATION ON PUBLIC REGISTRY

Adjudicated juveniles who are fourteen or older at time of offense are required to register as adult offenders are placed on the adult registry, but not disclosed to the public.⁴

REGISTERABLE OFFENSES

Juveniles adjudicated delinquent for sex related offenses that would constitute as a felony are required to register as a sex offender. See Statute.⁵ Offenses equal to or greater than aggravated sexual abuse require registration as an adult sex offender.⁶

DURATION AND FREQUENCY OF REGISTRATION

COMMUNITY NOTIFICATIONS

Information pertaining to juveniles adjudicated delinquent is confidential and is only released to specific state agencies and individuals authorized to receive information from juvenile courts. This information is managed by the Juvenile Justice Agency.¹⁰ Juveniles adjudicated delinquent who are required to register as adult offenders are not subject to public disclosure on the internet.¹¹

RESTRICTIONS

No restrictions are expressly provided in the juvenile sex offender registration statute for juveniles adjudicated delinquent. The adult sex offender registration statute does not specifically state whether restrictions apply to those adjudicated juveniles who are required to register as adult offenders.¹²

Juvenile Sex Offenses: Community Notification, NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 62F.200 to 62F.260

Please note that the law and statutes cited above are currently being enforced. This system was repealed by the Nevada's version of the Adam Walsh Act, enacted by the Nevada Legislature in 2007. However, a permanent injunction of the new legislation was ordered by the Nevada Federal District Court and therefore the prior laws are currently being enforced. The appeal of the federal injunction is presently pending in the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. Also, the application of the new Adam Walsh Legislation was found to be unconstitutional as applied to adjudications of delinquency. This finding is also on appeal and pending in the Nevada Supreme Court. If the legislation does come into effect, juveniles adjudicated delinquent for the offenses lewdness with child under the age of 14 (Tier II), sexual assault (Tier III), and battery with intent to commit sexual assault (Tier III) will have to register every 90 (Tier III) or 120 days (Tier II) for a minimum of 25 years and will be subject to the public web site.

POWERFUL ADVOCACY IN OHIO

In an effort to comply with SORNA, the Ohio General Assembly passed Senate Bill 10 (hereinafter S.B. 10) in 2007. S.B. 10 went into effect on January 1, 2008 and drastically changed Ohio's sex-offender registries, most notably by creating a three-tiered, offense-based classification scheme. (OHIO REV. CODE ANN. §§ 2950.01(E), (F), & (G) (West 2010); formerly OHIO REV. CODE ANN. §§ 2950.09 (repealed July 1, 2007)). The new classification system required persons convicted or adjudicated delinquent of sex crimes to be categorized as Tier I, Tier II or Tier III offenders based solely on the offenses for which they were convicted. Ohio's SORNA imposes new post-release registration and community notification requirements for each tier of offenders that are more restrictive in most cases than the requirements imposed under Megan's Law.

First State deemed to be in "Substantial Compliance" with SORNA

On September 23, 2009, United States Attorney General Eric Holder announced that Ohio was the first state to substantially implement SORNA. Even before earning the dubious distinction of being the first state to come in compliance with the SORNA, the Office of the Ohio Public Defender and partners waged one of the most notable legal challenges to a law in the history of American jurisprudence. To this day, Senate Bill 10 continues to face multiple significant legal challenges.

State v. Bodyke, 126 Ohio St.3d 266, 933 N.E.2d 753 (2010)

In 2010, the Ohio Supreme Court voided as unconstitutional two sections of the Ohio SORNA that authorized the state attorney general to reclassify sex offenders (both juvenile and adult) who had already been classified by judges under the previous Megan's Law, holding that the challenged provisions violated the separation-of-powers doctrine of the Ohio Constitution. The Bodyke decision left in place the registration and community notification requirements of SORNA applicable to sex offenders who were classified on or after the effective date of that law, and reinstated the pre-SORNA registration and community notification requirements that judges had ordered offenders to comply with pursuant to Megan's Law.

State v. Williams, Slip Opinion No. 2011-Ohio-3374 (2011)

In July 2011, the Ohio Supreme Court ruled that because the classification and registration scheme in Ohio's SORNA crossed the line from civil and remedial to criminal punishment, it is unconstitutional to retroactively apply it. The Williams decision will relieve those convicted or adjudicated for offenses that occurred before S.B. 10's effective date from SORNA registration requirements.

- 2 See B.J.B. v. State, 805 N.E.2d 870, 876 (Ind. Ct. App. 2004) The court determined that the juvenile court had erred in requiring the defendant to register as sex offender, because the court had failed to hold a sex offender registry hearing after the juvenile completed a sex offender treatment program. The juvenile court had required registration based on psychological evaluations conducted prior to the juvenile defendant's treatment and the single prior incident of sexual molestation).

- 12 IOWA CODE § 692A.105.

- 14 The Iowa Appellate Court held that because the statute puts no limit on the number of times a court may review the issue of registration requirement, a juvenile is not limited to a single opportunity to petition for removal from the sex offender registry. See In re B.A., 737 N.W.2d 665 (Iowa Ct. App. 2007). While the juvenile bears the burden of establishing that he or she does not have to register by a preponderance of the evidence, the statute does not require the presence of substantial change in circumstances to gain removal from the registry. Id. Finally, the court established that the juvenile court has continued jurisdiction on certain matters even after the person has been discharged from the jurisdiction of the juvenile court due to reaching the age of 18. Id. (emphasis added); see IOWA CODE §§ 232.149A, 232.150, 692A.2.

Michigan

- 1 MICH. COMP. LAWS § 28.722 (2011).
- 2 MICH. COMP. LAWS § 28.722.
- 3 MICH. COMP. LAWS § 762.14. HYTA allows individuals ages 17 to 21, after being convicted of a criminal offense, to participate in a probation program. If they comply with the program, the conviction does not appear on their public criminal history. A person assigned to HYTA before Oct. 1, 2004 must comply with the sex offender registration requirements and remain on the sex offender registry. These individuals may petition the court for a reduced registration period of (10) years.

Persons assigned to HYTA after Oct. 1, 2004, are not required to be on the public sex offender registry. Moreover, the provisions of the Sex Offender Registration Act and the Holmes Youthful Trainee Act that require perpetrators of so-called "Romeo and Juliet" sex offenses, which involve consensual sex between minors, who are assigned to "youthful trainee status" to register as sex offenders if the offense was committed before October 1, 2004, does not violate equal protection guarantees because the Legislature has a rational basis for adopting a gradual approach to eliminating the registration requirement for that class of offenders. MICH. COMP. LAWS §§ 28.721 to 736, 762.11 to 16; see Doe v. Mich. Dep't of State Police, 490 F.3d 491 (6th Cir. 2007). This action protects the privacy of the offender while on trainee status. If the youth successfully completes the program, there is no criminal record, and imprisonment or probation cannot exceed three years. MICH. COMP. LAWS § 762.11.

MICH. COMP. LAWS § 762.11(3): EXCEPTIONS TO THE HOLMES YOUTHFUL TRAINEE ACT: The court shall not assign an individual to the status of youthful trainee if any of the following apply:

(a) The individual was previously convicted of or adjudicated for a listed offense for which registration is required under the sex offenders registration act, 1994 PA 295, MICH. COMP. LAWS § 28.732; or,

(b) If the individual is charged with a listed offense for which registration is required under the sex offenders registration act, 1994 PA 295, MICH. COMP. LAWS § 28.721 to 28.732, the individual fails to carry the burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence that he or she is not likely to engage in further listed offenses.

According to the court, the Legislature "has concluded that law enforcement agencies and the public should, [] continue to be apprised of the individual's whereabouts for purposes of tracking the offender and for the safety of the public... 1 Sex Offender Registry Frequently Asked Questions, available at <http://criminaljustice.state.ny.us/nsor/faq.htm>. An individual adjudicated as a youthful offender or juvenile delinquent is not convicted of a crime, and his or her records are not available to the public. As a result, he or she is not required to be registered in New York State.

2 N.Y. PENAL LAW § 60.02(3) (2011); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 60.35; see also People v. Andrew W., 189 Misc. 2d 479, 483 (N.Y. County Ct. 2001) (Imposing adult probation to adjudicated juveniles who receive youth offender status). In the Andrew W. case, the court reasoned that the statutory language indicates that the legislature's intent was to impose the same 10 year probationary period on adjudicated juveniles as on convicted adult sex offenders. Id. at 485. However, the court has discretion of deciding whether to impose school restrictions for adjudicated juveniles. Id. at 486.

9 N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 168-k; see Matter of Smith v Devane, 2010 NY Slip Op 02895 (N.Y. App. Div. 3d Dep't 2010). In Devane, defendant entered a guilty plea for a felony sex offense, and received deferred adjudication by a Texas court. In Texas, a deferred adjudication is not considered a conviction; however, Texas law does require public registration for deferred adjudication. Defendant argued that he was not required to register upon moving to New York because his deferred adjudication was not a conviction. The New York Court rejected the argument and required him to register because the defendant entered a plea of guilty in Texas, which is considered a conviction in New York. Because the defendant had committed a felony, the New York court held that it was imposing registration just as Texas had.

⁴ Before the enactment of amendments to the Pennsylvania Megan's Law, only juveniles convicted of a registerable offense in another state were required to register under Pennsylvania sex offender registry. 42 PA. CONS. STAT. § 975.2(b). After the statute was amended January 24, 2005 to include adjudications as requiring registration just like convictions, juveniles adjudicated delinquent in another state were held to not be retrospectively required to register. Commonwealth v. Ramadan, 70 Pa. D. & C. 4th at 523-34. (Holding that the amended version does not apply retroactively to out-of-state, adjudicated delinquencies.) Further, imposing lifetime registration requirements on juveniles for offenses resolved in juvenile court is described as contrary to the Juvenile Act, whose purpose was "to enable children to become responsible and productive members of the community." Id. at 530-1, quoting 42 PA.
